

Doctor of Philosophy (DPHIL21)

1. Doctor of Philosophy

The Doctor of Philosophy (PhD) (DPHIL21) is a highly regarded research degree, in which students conduct independent research under the supervision and guidance of experts in their field. Through this research, students make a significant and original contribution to knowledge through thought leadership. The PhD requires the completion of a thesis of not more than 80k words, which demonstrates original thought, academic rigour, and a sustained program higher order thinking.

The Doctor of Philosophy comprises independent research, culminating in the submission of thesis in one of the following formats: standard narrative, publication, exegesis, or folio. Graduates of the PhD will have demonstrated cognitive skills including critical analysis, argument and problem solving to design a practical or theoretical proposition and apply intellectual independence to evaluate existing- or generate new knowledge.

Graduate employment opportunities

Graduates of the Doctor of Philosophy (PhD) have a bright future. They will have demonstrated their preparedness for a career in research and analysis within government, higher education, research centres and private enterprises. Graduates will have demonstrated intellectual leadership, positioning them for roles such as those in the following areas:

- Policy research
- Research projects
- Research & development
- Academic research
- Industry and government advising

Course Structure

The Doctor of Philosophy (PhD) (DPHIL21) course duration is three years’ full-time or six years part-time and can be studied online or on-campus.

Course Rules

To qualify for the Doctor of Philosophy (PhD) (DPHIL21), the candidate must pursue supervised research, leading to the submission of a thesis of not more than 80k words in English (unless the Associate Dean HDR approves submission of the thesis in a language other than English on academic grounds). The thesis will be reviewed by two external examiners of international standing in the field of enquiry. The thesis may be presented in the formats outlined in the table below.

A PhD candidate shall have a Principal Supervisor who is employed as an academic staff member of Torrens University Australia, including full-time, part-time, emeriti, and adjunct staff that are appropriately qualified to supervise research candidates. A PhD candidate shall also have an Associate Supervisor who may be internal or external to Torrens University Australia and must be a discipline expert in the field of research.

Thesis Formats

Allowable Thesis Formats
Standard Narrative A standard narrative is a written work comprised of no more than 80,000 words, which demonstrates original and critical thought, is clearly and coherently written, and makes an original contribution to knowledge in the field of enquiry. The thesis is presented in typescript and divided into chapters with appendices as relevant, with a sustained argument developed across the whole. The thesis may include some previously published work but cannot include work submitted for the award of another degree at the University or another tertiary institution in any country.
Thesis by Publication A thesis by publication is comprised of material that has been published during the enrolment of the degree, accepted for publication during the enrolment of the degree and prepared in manuscript style for publication. A thesis by publication must meet the requirements of the PhD in that the manuscripts must form a coherent whole in both theme and structure and include the embodiment of a sustained argument. The following conditions apply when submitting a thesis by publication: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • all publications must derive from work undertaken during the period of higher degree candidature. Papers published prior to the period of higher degree candidature cannot be included. The papers forming part of the thesis must include: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> ○ a minimum of three fully developed, peer reviewed scholarly publications, including where two papers are accepted for publication in peer-reviewed journals as principal author and at least one additional scholarly paper under review. The candidate must be the major contributor and first author on all works; and ○ a minimum of two scholarly publications reporting original research, including one paper that may focus on theoretical discussion and critical review. Approval from the Associate Dean HDR must be sought for the inclusion of conference papers. • an introductory chapter including a comprehensive narrative that features background to the research, the relationship and linkage between the published papers and overarching research questions. The introductory chapter must clearly articulate how these papers form part of a detailed response to a specific research topic; • a comprehensive literature review chapter, showing exhaustive coverage of the extant literature in the field and clearly identifying and justifying the future research direction; • all publications must be accompanied by details of their status (i.e., published, accepted for publication, or otherwise); and,

Allowable Thesis Formats

- all authors must complete a statement of authorship outlining the candidate’s contribution and co-authors must give written permission for the paper to be included in the thesis.

Exegesis

An exegesis is a critical explanation or interpretation of a major creative work. The exegesis is limited to 60,000 words and should describe the form of the major creative work, background to the inception, discussion on theoretical foundations positioning the work within the broader framework of the discipline area through theory and contextualisation with others’ work and original contribution of the work to the field. The major creative component of the submission must demonstrate innovation, originality, and creativity in addition to advancing high level concepts and creative design. The exegesis must be supported by output which forms a major part of the submission including one or more of the following outputs: a patent, design, model, exhibition, musical or literary composition, performance, film, software, portfolio or work or multimedia presentation. An exegesis may include a viva voce demonstration or presentation as requested by a student, supervisor, or examiner. The thesis may have a variety of formats, depending on the field of study.

Folio

A folio of advanced professional practice should involve a significant contribution to the theory and advanced professional practice. The candidate must demonstrate the ability to conduct a substantial research program and to communicate the outcomes of this research effectively to both research and practice. Award of the degree is by examination of a written thesis and substantial workplace outputs in the form of a folio. Candidates choosing the folio pathway must demonstrate a substantial original contribution to the knowledge and practice in the discipline and industry chosen for investigation. To complete the PhD folio, the candidate must be championed by a workplace sponsor.

Candidates are required to:

- a) consult with their Principal Supervisor regularly;
- b) undertake structured activities as prescribed by their supervisor(s);
- c) present a research plan and proposal by the end of the first trimester of study (or part-time equivalent);
- d) submit progress reports in accordance with the Research Student Progress Procedure; and,
- e) present research findings to faculty as per the milestones outlined in the Student Progress Procedure.
